It's only April, but for me it feels like we are quite a way into 2023. The weather is getting nicer, thoughts naturally turn to ALA Annual, and it is time for another issue of Library Leadership & Management.

This month we have some very thought-provoking articles on topics ranging from bullying in the workplace and the pandemic (both looking forward as well as looking back at the past few years), to knowledge management and how that can help us in our library work.

Coming in a few months we are going to have some bigger changes at LL&M. Since the formation of Core, the editors of LL&M have been working closely with our counterparts at the other Core journals -- Library Resources & Technical Services (LRTS) and Information Technology and Libraries (ITAL). These three publications are currently hosted in three different places – Texas Digital Library, Boston College, and ALA. I'm happy to share that this summer we will all be moving to ALA's Open Journals System platform. ALA uses the same system that we currently use for submissions and review, so the experience as a reader, author, and reviewer will stay the same. The only difference will be the web address. Stay tuned for more information as we get closer to migration.

I hope you enjoy Volume 37, Number 1 of Library Leadership and Management. Happy reading!
